Fact Sheet: About the Ongoing Implementation Report

"After a year of work by the stakeholders in the Settlement, families have received more than $45 billion in much-needed relief and Ally has met and received credit for its consumer relief obligation," said Smith. "We also have set up a compliance infrastructure to measure servicing standards over the longer term. I believe we have made progress, particularly as it relates to consumer relief, but I know from my regular conversations with advocates across the nation that the banks and I have much more work to do on behalf of borrowers."

Background

As part of the National Mortgage Settlement, the five banks were required to provide consumer relief data on activities conducted between March 1, 2012 and Dec. 31, 2012. It has not yet been confirmed or approved by the Monitor. However, Ally asserted that it met its consumer relief requirements and the Monitor credited such relief in a report to the United States District Court for the District of Columbia on Feb. 14, 2013.

The numbers below represent gross dollar relief. Under the settlement, different types of relief receive different amounts of credit, and much of the relief, including short sales, will not be credited dollar for dollar. As such, the numbers reported here cannot be used to measure progress toward the banks' $20 billion requirement, except for Ally's. The public will be informed about the other servicers' crediting progress relative to their obligations after they formally submit their consumer relief activity information to the Monitor for credit and he tests their results.
